MODERN CHINESE PAINTINGS AND CALLIGRAPHY

Of the masterpieces of painting in China centuries ago we have some knowledge, but of serious modern work we know little. The present collection shows the freshness of vision and intensity of expression of at least one branch of the modern school in China. The Chinese written characters being essentially pictorial in origin, and not letters, writing remains in a real sense illustration of objects seen rather than symbols of sound,—calligraphy, or beautiful writing, falls within the sphere of the artist quite as much as pictorial representation; and therefore, both are practiced and appreciated side by side in much the same spirit.
